

The Fruits Floater.

Chief of Police Williamson of Aspen has not given up the quest to ascertain the identity of the floater found at Fruits. He believes that the name, Moore, was a fictitious one, and that the dead man was the same person who pawned a watch to Grocer Stevens at Glenwood Springs and purchased a round trip ticket from that place to Grand Junction.

Chief Williamson thinks the man was the victim of foul play. When he redeemed his watch at the Springs, he exhibited a big roll of money.

He proposes to work on the case until he obtains some definite knowledge of the man's identity and the causes leading up to his death.
